

The Fathers House

CADCOM

The Fathers House is a five bedroom residence located in Norristown primarily for low-income dads reentering Montgomery County following incarceration.

The program provides coaching and support services to help men transition well, obtain full-time employment, restore family relationships, manage finances, and achieve independence within one year.

The Fathers House is part of the Fatherhood Empowerment Center that endeavors to improve the well-being of low-income fathers in Montgomery County and their children by addressing the particular challenges they face. We use a variety of curricula and practices tailored to the needs of participants to address issues such as responsible parenting, healthy marriage and co-parent relationships, and economic stability.

The staff and volunteers at the Fatherhood Empowerment Center find great joy in helping dads discover the best version of themselves while healing from their past, overcoming the negative consequences of destructive decisions, repairing relationships and finding a new way of living that results in men of value in their communities and fathers of value in the lives of their children.

"I found a place where I am accepted and a group of guys like me who really want to be better men and do better for their children."

Help for fathers. Hope for families.
